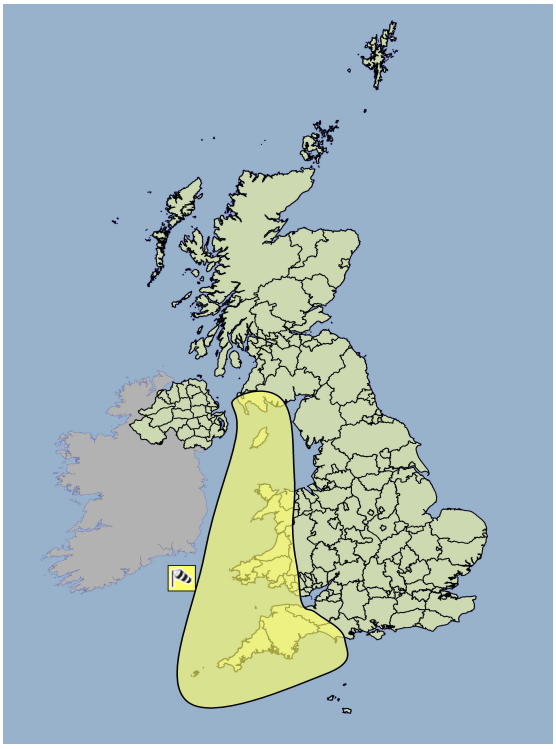
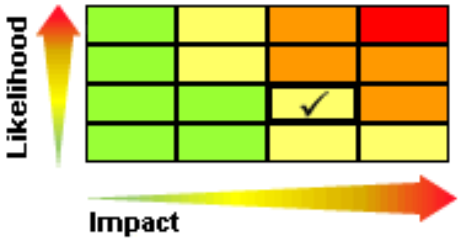
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A small but active depression will move quickly northwards during Thursday, bringing a short-lived period of gales and severe gales, particularly in areas exposed to the south. The region of strongest gusts will progress from the southwest of England during the morning, through areas adjoining the Irish Sea in the afternoon, before clearing from southwest Scotland in the early evening. There will also be spells of rain, some heavy, giving 5-10 mm fairly widely and locally 20 mm.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 09:00 on Thu, 13th Nov 2014 until 19:00 on Thu, 13th Nov 2014

Southerly gales are expected to affect the warning area during Thursday as a small low pressure centre moves north generating an area of severe gales within its circulation. Gusts of 50-60 mph are possible inland and as much as 75 mph along exposed coasts. A short spell of heavy rain, is also likely in these western areas during Thursday.

The public should be aware of the risk of some disruption, chiefly from the wind with a lower risk of surface water flooding.

This is an update to the earlier dual wind and rain warning to become a wind warning only as this element could produce medium impacts and it should be viewed alongside the recently issued Amber warning.
